Immediately Following the 2016 American Association of Colleges of Nursing Doctoral Conference

Presented by: The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation Nursing and Health Policy Collaborative of Nursing Doctoral Conference

CONFERENCE DESCRIPTION

This conference will increase the quality, rigor, and uniformity of health policy education in doctoral nursing programs by bringing together interprofessional experts in the instruction of health policy content. Participants will be exposed to a range of pedagogical material and approaches to doctoral health policy education that will help them envision and create a national repository of health policy education resources. Attendees will be invited to add their “best practices” teaching and learning activities to the repository for use by faculty teaching health policy to doctoral nursing students. The conference will build a community of colleagues committed to bringing health policy acumen to graduate faculty and students, with the overarching goal of providing nurse leaders with the skills they need to influence the policymaking process at all levels, to engage in rigorous health policy research and analysis, and to promote improvement in population health and health care.

CONFERENCE OBJECTIVES

At the conclusion of this conference, participants will be able to:

1. Participate in establishing a national repository for doctoral-level health policy nursing education that will include content, teaching tools, and strategies.
2. Draw on interprofessional expertise to improve health policy mastery in doctoral nursing education.
